Frozen Mountain receives the largest investment in a Canadian broadcast and video conferencing company since the start of COVID

SURREY, BC, January 29, 2021—Today, Frozen Mountain announced the company received a significant investment from entrepreneur Brian Hamilton. This deal represents the largest known investment in a Canadian video conferencing or broadcasting company since the start of COVID. The amount of the Frozen Mountain investment was not disclosed. Hamilton is the founder of Sageworks, the United States' first fintech company, which he sold to Accel-KKR in 2018.

Frozen Mountain provides real-time communication tools and services that allow clients to add live video conferencing, streaming, interactive broadcasting and more to their applications. Frozen Mountain was founded in 2008 by software engineers Jerod and Anton Venema, who lead the company today as chief executive officer and chief technology officer, respectively.

“We are thrilled with the investment from Brian Hamilton, an entrepreneur with proven experience in significantly scaling a technology company and guiding high-growth organizations,” Frozen Mountain CEO Jerod Venema said. “The partnership will allow Frozen Mountain to have an even bigger footprint in the real-time communication industry and to help more people connect to one another.”

“Jerod and Anton, and their team, are recognized global leaders in broadcasting and live video communications,” said Brian Hamilton. “We look forward to joining forces with Frozen Mountain to create reliable, high-quality live video products and to rapidly expand the company,” he continued.
